Hey Village People fans: Get a load of these phonies attempting to push a nobody named RAY SIMPSON who's never had a hit in his life, LOL, and who's greatest claim to fame is emulating me for the past 30 or so years. Oh, and Ray, you can shave off my trademark beard and mustache now. And you can stop copying my trademark "aaahoooo" when singing my songs too which was lifted right off all of my Village People recordings. It's my style of singing Ray, not yours, even if you ...

Hey Village People fans: Get a load of these phonies attempting to push a nobody named RAY SIMPSON who's never had a hit in his life, LOL, and who's greatest claim to fame is emulating me for the past 30 or so years. Oh, and Ray, you can shave off my trademark beard and mustache now. And you can stop copying my trademark "aaahoowwww" when singing my songs too which was lifted right off all of my Village People recordings. It's my style of singing Ray, not yours, even if you continue copying me for the next 100 years.

But fans, here's what's really going on with their use of the Village People mark which is only temporary.

Can't Stop who owns the Village People mark sued the Sixuvus (former Village People members). In response, the Sixuvus filed a cross-complaint against Can't Stop Productions with a ridiculous claim that it is actually them, who are the true owners of the Village People mark.

In addition, the former members (Sixuvus) claim that Can't Stop failed to supervise their use of the mark over the years and that this constitutes "blanket licensing," which can result in the loss of a trademark. They further claim that if blanket licensing has occurred, the Village People trademark is invalid. Yes, I know, they're out of your minds. Especially, considering Can't Stop micromanaged everything they did with the Village People mark and controlled their every move for the last 30 years or so (fools).

As a result, they wont get anywhere with that ridiculous claim (guaranteed). However ridiculous their claim might sound, if you make such a claim to the court, the court has an obligation to sort out the truth (which wont take long after evidence is presented) of their claim to ownership based on blanket licensing and other ridiculous theories, all of which will fail and my wife will see to it.

So, it is my understanding that the court granted them temporary relief to use the Village People mark (on a temporary basis) until the court can sort out the truth of their claim against Can't Stop.

As a result, many fans noticed the following statement on their social media: "We are the Legendary Village People." This was absolutely false, the court never gave them permission to call themselves that.

One week later, my wife intervened in their lawsuit against Can't Stop, and shut down their use of "Legendary Village People." Now they're referring to themselves temporarily as "Village People featuring Ray Simpson," LOL! They tried to stop my wife from intervening because they know once Karen enters the case, it curtains for them, CURTAINS, LOL!

But here's the kicker, if after looking at the evidence, the court concludes that their blanket claim is bogus, it is my understanding they will owe my wife big bucks for trademark infringement for their temporary use of "Village People featuring Ray Simpson."

Village People fans in Australia by now are aware that I'm suffering from a very bad cold while here. But what is this guy's excuse for sounding terrible?

ABOUT ME

Village People Bio For 40 years, the music of Village People has been putting smiles on the faces of fans all around the world. Their hits have become part of the international songbook – and heard in commercials from Pepsi to Wonderful Pistachios. In fact, the iconic Y.M.C.A (along with its dance) is featured at almost every party, wedding, bar mitzvah, and sporting event. It began in 1977 when producer/composer Jacques Morali, with business partner Henri Belolo, were recording a new album for their group, Ritchie Family, called African Queens. One of the background singers recruited for the album by arranger and conductor Horace Ott was Victor Willis who was performing in the Broadway musical The Wiz. After completing the album, Morali and Belolo again approached Willis – this time about another musical project they were planning. “I had a dream that you sang lead vocals on an album I produced, and it went very, very big,” Morali told Willis. “I have four tracks. I can’t pay you much right now but if you agree, I’ll make you a star.” Willis agreed. Those four tracks, San Francisco (You’ve Got Me), In Hollywood (Everyone’s a Star), Fire Island, and Village People were recorded by Willis with professional background singers and released on the debut album Village People in 1977. Essentially, Village People initially was simply Victor Willis. The album quickly rose to the top of the dance charts. Demand for the “group” to appear in concert and on television shows like American Bandstand and Merv Griffin was great. The only problem – there was no group! This forced Morali, Belolo and Willis to put together an actual group around Willis and quick. Village People became an international phenomenon with the release of their second album, Macho Man. Following the release of their third album, Cruisin, they embarked on a worldwide tour. Cher, Madonna and Joan Rivers are among artists who appeared on the bill with Village People everywhere from Las Vegas to Madison Square Garden to Hollywood’s Greek Theatre. Even Michael Jackson shared billing with the group. With hits like San Francisco/In Hollywood, Macho Man, YMCA, In the Navy and Go West, the group sold more than 100 million records worldwide and earned many awards including the American Music Award-Favorite Musical Group 1979. Village People was featured on the cover of Rolling Stone. Television appearances included a Bob Hope Special, 20/20, American Bandstand, Solid Gold, Soul Train, Midnight Special, and Don Kirshner’s Rock Concert. Village People hits are featured in dozens of major motion pictures, including Wayne’s World II, Adams Family Values, The Nutty Professor, and Despicable Me 2. The Broadway hit Priscilla: Queen of the Desert features the Village People tune Go West. The songs are also heard in casinos around the world in “Village People Party” slot machines. In September 2008, the group received a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. Over the years, various renditions of Village People consistently toured the world with several replacement lead singers. On the 40th anniversary of the group, Willis, the original lead singer, returned. With his powerful and distinctive voice, the party continues with the original “Hot Cop” back at the helm featuring a live band for a world class Village People performance and headline act.
